

WHAT TO KNOW

BEFORE YOU GO TO YOUR VETERINARIAN DURING COVID-19

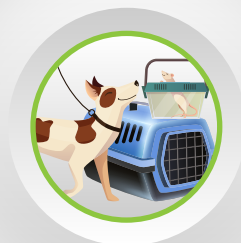

Most vets are still open for emergencies, but protective protocols are in place:

Please respect all signs at vet hospitals and ERs about distancing, building entry, etc.

Veterinary staff are doing their best under stressful and uncertain conditions, and in some cases risking their lives.

Many hospitals have switched to curbside pick-up and drop-off of pets and medications. Make sure your pet is securely leashed or in a secure carrier.

Many people are spending more time with their pets, and may be noticing more things than under normal conditions: lumps, bumps, skin tags, etc.

Now is not the time for routine procedures like nail trims, anal glands, etc. if your vet is only seeing emergency cases.

Call your hospital or visit their website before a visit to learn the proper protocol and follow instructions.

Wash your hands and be kind. We'll get through this.
